
INSTRUCTIONAL MATERIALS FOR USE IN SOUTH CAROLINA SCHOOLS
FOR THE 2006–07 SCHOOL YEAR

South Carolina Department of Education
April 2006

NOTE

- This document can be found on the Web site for adopted instructional materials at www.sctextbooks.com under “What’s New.” The annotations in this document have not been proofed by the Department of Education’s editorial staff.
- The deadline of April 3, 2006, for reporting your selection of state adopted texts must be adhered to particularly if you are serving students in your district who are blind or visually impaired. District orders for textbooks that must be transcribed into Braille or large print are due on April 19, 2006. A designated individual in your district places these orders, typically the special education coordinator or his/her designee. Transcribing texts into Braille or large print requires a minimum of 10–12 weeks per text. Various vendors outside of South Carolina do the transcription for orders from around the country, which makes it most important that orders from South Carolina are sent to the vendors promptly. By law, a student with a disability must have equal access to his/her education, including access to his/her textbooks on the first day of school. If the student does not have textbooks due to a delay on the part of the district, then that child is eligible to receive compensatory educational services at district expense. Please provide this urgent information to the designated individual in your district or the special education coordinator.

This integrated series is recommended for average and above average readers with supports that provide both remediation and opportunities for enrichment. This series provides themed selections that represent various literary genres and cultural traditions. Varied learning engagements integrate the English language arts strands with a good correlation to the standards.

This series allows for creative and flexible teaching, as shown in the organization of the series. Teachers can choose to teach by theme or genre. There are many opportunities for differentiated instruction. EMC provides a variety of authors and literature selections. Supplementary literature is packaged in Access editions, with the primary novel accompanied by selections from other genres. An interesting approach to the support novels is that they contain marginal notes and questions to assist students as they are reading. The supplementary materials, such as the Literacy Resource Binder, are integrated.

Teacher materials address learning styles and higher-order thinking skills are promoted. Interdisciplinary connections are made. Assessment tools accompany the support novels. The series has a very strong, process-oriented writing program. The Write-In Readers provide interactive reading strategies. There are adequate technology resources for teachers.

This series is appropriate for average and above average students in grades six through eight. It provides an integrated approach to teaching reading, writing, language arts, spelling, communication, and research. This series emphasizes the integration of the English language arts strands with a strong, detailed correlation with the standards. Standards are printed in the text and literary works are given that focus on that particular standard. Learning engagements are provided that make the connection between reading, other curriculum areas, and real-life events. Strategies for taking standardized tests are embedded in the book so that test-taking skills are not taught in isolation. Informational text is also included. Reading non-fiction text is used to promote research and inquiry.

The series includes resources, such as Kylene Beers "talking to" students, Harvey Daniel's literature circles, and the inclusion of informational text in each collection. Instructional materials are research based and were created with best practices as the foundation. Among the noteworthy features are the suggestions for differentiating instruction to accommodate different levels of reading and diverse learner needs. CDs and online resources, including essay scoring, are available. Learning link provides readers with multiple opportunities to explore beyond the reading book. Appropriate books are suggested for further reading to build the bridge between the textbook and other sources.

Program and Components	ISBN	Grade	Copyright	Price
The unique leveled libraries feature well-chosen selections for a variety of readers. The library contains three levels of texts to help support and extend the reading in the core text. The library is literature rich containing multiple copies of a variety of texts, ranging from picture books and novels. Teacher support material on literature circles is also included to promote best practice.

This 2006 series is recommended for average and above average reading comprehension in grades six through eight, yet can be adapted for lower levels. Many of the selections are classic literature and can be modified for a range of reading levels. The readings in the textbook reflect varied reading levels, cultures, and genres. It is an attractive text that is well organized and easy to follow. The novel choices are real-world, high interest books for teenagers. The integrated text supports the teaching of the 2002 English language arts standards.

Supplementary materials include a variety of technology tools such as videos, CDs, and online resources. Materials are provided for English language learners, including the summary translations in five languages, as well as materials for Spanish speakers. Writing models are provided to support the writing process. Supplemental books also include nonfiction texts.

Teachers should note the availability of novels from the McDougal Littell theme-based library that correspond to the South Carolina theme-based lesson plans.

In order to meet the call for materials to promote a variety of classroom structures (literature circles, paired reading, guided reading), teachers should order at least six multiple copies of minimum of twenty titles.

This series emphasizes a strong correlation to the standards and highlights integration of all the English language arts strands. The South Carolina English language arts standards are listed at the beginning of each lesson for teachers and students. Learning engagements integrate writing, speaking, and research into the literature lessons.

There are many supports for both teachers and students. The format of the text is extremely student-centered and the single column format is easy to read. The series provides paired reading selections (one accessible, one challenging) in order to support students at different reading levels. A variety of learning engagements at different levels fosters differentiated instruction. Critical thinking skills and scaffolding are emphasized for successful student achievement.

One strength of the program is the classroom library selection. Selections reflect various genres and forms of literature, and the authors represent diverse cultures. There is a thematic connection with real authors and novels. A CD is included about the authors to promote "getting to know the author." A variety of authors and the accompanying videos make connections with real people.

This social studies series incorporates the social studies standards for K-2. The K-2 components are very well written and pleasing to the eye. Teacher objectives are clear with many different types of extension and assessment activities readily available. It provides comprehension, understanding, and real-world experiences. Students will have hands on experiences. Across curriculum activities are listed and some materials provided. Supplementary materials will complement each lesson. Technology is evident in this series and will provide enhancement to student learning.

The Harcourt third grade program supports the South Carolina Social Studies Academic Standards. Lesson content includes history, geography, cultural studies, government, and economics. Skill lessons are included to promote critical thinking among students, with a good emphasis on decision-making and citizenship skills. The teacher guide is organized for easy flexibility and preparations. Content area reading is emphasized and reading skills such as "compare and contrast" and "sequence" are included. A large amount of background information is made available for teacher use in every chapter. There are ample activities that contribute to the integration of all subjects across the curriculum including art and technology. Activities for advanced and below level learners are also provided. Time Readers are offered, but do not connect directly to South Carolina studies. They rather highlight general American history and are repeated in fourth grade. The Support and Test Preparation supplemental student book has selections reinforcing social studies lessons while teaching test taking and reading skills. This text is student friendly and is enhanced with colorful illustrations and maps, charts, and graphics.

The Harcourt Horizons series is designed for use throughout the academic year. It offers events in a chronological order presented in a timeline format at the beginning of each unit. This textbook is student friendly, as it provides a focus skill, vocabulary, and a review with each lesson to increase student understanding. In addition, the supplementary materials enhance and complement each lesson, which further increases understanding and helps students make real life connections. The Harcourt program offers leveled readers that will allow students to learn on a level that is appropriate for them. All books in the Harcourt Horizons provide integration across the core subject areas.

Houghton Mifflin K–2 Social Studies is an Early Childhood program designed to help children experience their place in the world. It also provides opportunities to explore and to build character traits of good citizens. Core lessons written in a child friendly, narrative style covers state social studies standards while lesson extensions dig deeper and allow for multiple paths for learning. Language arts standards are supported with Readers Theater and leveled readers in each unit and a partnership with Weekly Reader keeps content current. Additional resources for teachers and students may be accessed at the publisher Web site, www.eduplace.com.

This South Carolina studies text is primarily history based with the first four units providing a chronological study of South Carolina from early settlement to present day. The fifth unit studies South Carolina in terms of geographical features and how the presence of natural resources have shaped the state's economy and growth. To assist students in understanding of the text, vocabulary and reading strategies are incorporated into the beginning of each lesson. The authors also provide for review and extension. The student text incorporates a lesson summary, review question(s) and a Why It Matters section at the end of each core lesson. Each chapter also concludes with extension lessons and chapter review and test prep pages. The teacher's manual contains a vocabulary and study guide for each core lesson. A line of supplementary materials is provided, which include practice books, PACT prep, research and writing projects, primary sources, leveled readers, test generators, and access to the eduplace.com Web site for additional resources.

Houghton Mifflin Social Studies: United States History is appropriate for use at the fourth and fifth grade levels. The reading level of the fourth grade book is 4.5 and the fifth grade book is 5.4 using the Harris Jacobson readability formula. Both books are designed for a full year of study, however, several chapters in both texts address time periods not covered by the standards for that particular grade. United States history is chronologically presented from earliest civilizations through present day. The South Carolina Social Studies Academics of history, geography, political science, and economics are interwoven throughout the text and supplementary materials. Opportunities for learners are provided through such resources as leveled readers, lesson summaries, and varied activities that address all learning styles. Reading and critical thinking skills are addressed in each lesson. Technology components are available for student and teacher use, making materials easily accessible. Primary sources in both the student text and supplementary materials include documents, photographs, and songs. Building on prior knowledge at the beginning of each lesson and summarizing the content at the end, in addition to the use of maps, charts, and graphs increase student understanding. Varied assessment formats, both formal and informal, are provided.

Joy Hakim's A History of United States, Oxford University Press presents United States history in narrative form. Hakim weaves teaching and storytelling together in a series of ten books that entwines teachers and students taking them from prehistory to 2001. The books and accompanying teaching aides are well organized and well written presenting concepts, processes and skills in a way that standards are addressed without compromising children's intellect or imagination. Questioning and hypothesizing in the text allows for ongoing student assessment and evaluation. Crucial concepts are reinforced with questions and activities in the teaching guides, not at the end of chapters and units, so as not to interrupt student reading. A History of United States is divided into multiple texts for fourth and fifth graders that will prove much more book bag and back friendly. Maps, graphics and illustrations are presented in an appealing way. Difficult words (words to discuss) are written with pronunciations and are explained by the author. Boxes are informative and not always meant to be read by the student. A teacher without a strong background in history can use these for reference and information. The teaching guides are well organized.

come to life as you read the lessons. Students would enjoy the different activities that are throughout the book. The supplementary materials will enhance and complement each lesson, along with the student activities that will make students think critically. Technology and other subjects are woven into lessons. The teacher book has everything laid out for each lesson and is very easy to follow.

This third grade social studies text does a comprehensive job of addressing South Carolina studies. It correlates well to the state social studies academic standards and shows South Carolina's role in the development of our nation. The use of timelines helps to organize information, events, and people. The Lexile score for the book is 670 and also is correlated to the South Carolina English Language Arts Curriculum Standards. The textbook is full of graphics that engage students. The addition of primary sources and the Colonial Williamsburg connection enhances the student experience. The activities are appropriate as are the assessments. The Regions virtual fieldtrip adds to understanding and helps to cover different learning styles. The units and skills correlate well to the reading skills and strategies for teaching reading through social studies. The ideas and concepts are balanced in terms of gender, ethnicity, and race and interwoven throughout the book.

The Scott Foresman textbooks for grades four and five have valuable teaching material displayed clearly in each chapter. Ancillary resources and technology are provided for each unit, including a student edition available online, and partnership Web sites provide endless resources and information for student and teacher use. This text includes many teacher friendly materials and extra resources to allow for differentiated instruction. The books correlate well to the state social studies academic standards. The Lexile scores for each program are in mid-range for each grade, and the texts are correlated to the South Carolina English Language Arts Curriculum Standards. Text features capture the students' attention and serve as a motivational tool.

Journey Across Time, authored by Jackson Speilvogel, offers a survey of world history. The graphics provided to students within the text are age appropriate, exciting, easy to read and understand, but yet they offer challenging questions and points of view for the student to consider. The text is also rich with primary source documents and geographic diagrams. Included are useful supplemental materials to the textbook that would allow the classroom teacher to modify individual instruction as needed. It should be noted that while this book does address the seventh grade academic standards, the company provides a supplement and on-line support to more adequately address these standards.

Oxford World in Ancient Times and Medieval and Early Modern World support the sixth grade academic standards for students working above grade level. The use of primary documents is beneficial to research standards and insight into the historical periods. Primary documents allow the history to be more real to the student. The use of color images in the text also adds interest and appeal to the reader. The multi-volume set is a bonus in a time when there is much concern over the weight of student book bags. Support materials include student workbook and teaching guide and are provided the first year of adoption.

Contemporary's World History is survey of world history from prehistoric through modern times. The text includes economic, social, and intellectual developments, as well as wars and political events. Each chapter provides historical information in multiple forms—text, visual images, maps, and charts. The final chapter of the book introduces five case studies that represent important issues that continue to challenge our world.

The text is written at a fifth- to eighth-grade reading level and contains key concepts and basic facts necessary for the study of world history at the middle school level. Key support is given with pre-reading activities that guide students through a preview of the text and illustrations. Additional support includes student CD and blackline masters and overhead transparencies in the teacher’s resource binder.
